

SMALL BUSINESS STARTUP

Considering Insurance Needs

Starting a small business requires tireless effort and endless financial reserves. Besides dealing with necessary tasks to start the business—affording exorbitant start-up costs, establishing a customer base, forecasting cash flow problems—new small business owners are besieged on all sides by risks.

The only sure-fire thing you can count on during the tumultuous beginning stages of your business or later in its development is the protection offered by commercial insurance. Avoid losing everything to a disaster that you could have easily insured—purchase robust and comprehensive commercial insurance to keep your small business protected on all sides.

Essential Covers

Small businesses vary widely in their insurance needs. Many different factors—including industry, location and size—will determine the type of insurance your business needs to survive. All businesses, however, can benefit from the essential covers listed below.

- Employers' liability is mandatory for all UK employers. It covers employers' liability for bodily injuries or diseases their employees may suffer in the course of their employment.
- Property protects your commercial property, buildings and contents from a broad range of risks.
- Business interruption recoups lost profits in the event that insurable property damage causes your business to temporarily close.

Scrutinise Your Business' Weaknesses

Harshly scrutinising your business' weaknesses can help you choose which covers you need and devise a long-term plan to strengthen your business against foreseeable risks.

- Public liability covers your liability for third-party injury and property damage arising from your business' operations.
- Products liability insures against damages and costs arising from accidental injury or damage caused by products supplied by your business.
- Cyber liability provides protection against a host of cyber threats, including hacking, stolen data and system failure.

This list is not exhaustive. Depending on your specific business, you may need to consider additional cover options to fully protect your business.

Additional Covers to Consider

Carefully consider the needs of your business—is there anything unique about it that would require additional insurance protection? Consider the following additional covers. Many businesses cannot afford to go without them.

- Motor fleet
- Legal expenses
- Theft by employee
- Equipment breakdown
- Stock
- Loss of money
- Trade credit
- Professional indemnity
- Crime
- Key person
- And much more

Part of investigating available insurance covers is determining the points where your business is weakest. Pinpoint the spots where your business is the most vulnerable, and secure insurance that bolsters those vulnerabilities.
